Well I don't know if it was rizzed... as responsible parents. football training and certainly not meal should've been a priority over the time, it was about a bed for Ern, and the car without a seat. My expectation however it doesn't excuse taking her in and I'm always appreciative of that Now I know you was doing us a favour Backwards when we have made plans, then you have a go at her. It is uncalled for as your family are not queuing up to help.

Just a heads up Katie's fuming (so am I like but I think Katie is the one you'll be more arsed about) Please do not take Erin in a car without a car seat again. It's not safe. It wasn't an emergency. If you couldn't be arsed walking home you should have said we would have cancelled our plans and would have got her home safely. Also telling the kids to keep secrets is a different conversation all together just focusing on the main thing x

17:29

It wasn't a case of not being arsed about walking home. Katie arrived having not fed Erin and was worried she'd be starving. To the point of texting several times to see if she was ok. I was going to walk home, but couldn't leave until John got there and then (knowing what time football finishes!!) you can appreciate I was worried she'd be screaming most of the way home. It was John's idea, but I obviously went along with it, but in home. It was John's idea, but I obviously went along with it, but in future don't bring your daughter last minute having had no food, just to go and buy a bed knowing both kids were at football training for 2 hours and I had no car because John was out shopping. I didn't tell them to keep a secret and don't worry I won't do it again

Ahhh just read that text out loud and someone said it wasn't John's idea it was yours but ok. I'll be honest I'd rather her be hungry than dead. But I do apologise that Katie wanted to spend some adult time alone. We don't have childcare for all three children so don't spend time alone together. I'll make sure I won't ask you again obviously as a responsible father I have to make sure my children are safe

I've just read that text out loud to John and he said he did suggest it and his words to me when I disagree we're "you'll be fine you'll have a seatbelt on it's just down disagree we're "you'll be fine you'll have a seatbelt on it's just down the road" I'm not a liar, neither is John. It wasn't about alone time, it was about a bed for Erin, and shouldn't have been a priority over the football training and certainly not meal time...as responsible parents.

22:11

17:45

Well I don't know if it was mixed messages or Katie wanted some alone time but I have to drive almost past IKEA on my way home. I was just gonna get it. But like I said we don't get alone time so I also think it was Katie's way of getting some. Like you said you will not have all three kids together overnight so we get alone time and that's fine we're use to it being us against the world. But I'm sure your style of parenting is the right way. But anyway I'm messaging you as the alternative is Katie and as you're not my parent I'm trying to be polite. I'm sure when you speak to Katie it will be different Some advice for you though wh you do speak her I would suggest apoloising rather than justifying you do speak her I would suggest apologising rather than justifying why you're not wrong (when you're clearly very wrong endangering my daughters life)

17:53 ✓

Once again you have messaged me having a go at me but strangely not messaging John. Your daughter was dropped off at 5:20 knowing it would be after 7 when we got back. After several messages panicking, Katie made me panic. Not justifying it. Giving you facts. I babysit at the drop off a hat several times a week sometimes. I don't have to!! If you wish to discuss this further, ring John rather than have another go at me. It wasn't my idea, I was against it and already said I wouldn't do it again. I won't be apologising for something that I was against. I work full time and babysit every time I'm asked, even when I've already made plans, like I had last Thursday!! I'm not being made to feel guilty about not babysitting all 3 overnight. Ask your dad, Donna or my mum, see what their answer is.

Well that wasn't my intention and as mentioned to Angela me messaging resulted in a politer message than if Katie messaged. Now I know you was doing us a favour and I'm always appreciative of that however it doesn't excuse taking her in the car without a seat. My expectation off Angela would have been to at least apologise without prompting. I've not just messaged her looking for a fight. I am pissed off at the situation as I rather have gone for the bed ^

Just to let you know it was my idea to drive back to our house not Angela's, I will apologise for no car seat, but you have yet again have my wife in tears because of your comments, am not happy about this, angela bending over backwards when we have made plans, then you have a go at her, this is uncalled for as your family are not queuing up to help, am pissed off at the situation as i'd rather have gone for the bed myself or a different day than have her in a car without a seat. As for my family i don't make out that they have the kids or out mainly because of who will be there i don't think they would be safe.

But Angela makes out on fb she's amazing then slags me off for not taking Katie away when she knows i literally can't as we don't have the childcare. But i haven't personally asked Angela for child care for over six months until the other day. Not looking to fall out but like i said me messaging was a whole lot better than Katie as she's also livid with the telling the kids to lie. But i knew when i text Angela she would go defensive rather than just say sorry. I would advise her to just apologise when she speaks to

Katie x

Where's your apology to Angela for tonight with your behaviour.

There won't be one. I messaged a relatively polite message under the circumstances for the pair of you endangering my daughters life.

Then Angela who constantly criticises my parenting style when her past experience with partnering leaves a lot to be desired. Could have just said sorry fucked up and it would have been left there. Instead she got defensive and started to critique both mine and Katie's parenting style yet again. So this all escalated because Angela can't be wrong. Now I'll apologise to the pair of you if you think I'm wrong to be pissed off that my daughter was endangered. If you think I'm right to be pissed off then I won't apologise as I've said if Angela had just said sorry this situation wouldn't have escalated
